Maths jokes

Why was the kite flyer so good at trigonometry?

They always knew the angle of elevation.

Why did 6 keep away from 7?

Because 7 8 9.

Why should you never start a conversation with π?

It goes on for ever.

Why are obtuse angles always so grumpy?

Because they are never right.

How do you warm up in a cold classroom?

Stand in the corner. It's 90 degrees.

What did the triangle say to the circle?

"You're pointless."

Why did the two 4s skip lunch?

They already 8.

Why is the equals sign so modest?

It knows it's not greater than or less than anyone.

Why did the decimal give up on the argument?

It couldn't see the point.

Why are parallel lines so sad?

They have so much in common but they'll never meet.

What did one angle say to the other?

"You're acute one."

What did 0 say to 8?

"Nice belt!"

Where do square numbers grow?

From their square roots.

Why is the mode always in fashion?

It turns up more often than anyone else.

Why do people trust a fair dice?

It never plays favourites: every face has a 1 in 6 chance.

How do two Venn diagram circles show they're friends?

They overlap.

Why didn't x come back?

It was finally solved.

Why did the inequality sign turn round?

Someone multiplied it by a negative.

Why did $3x$ and $5x$ get along so well?

They were like terms.

Where do graphs go to find themselves?

Back to the origin.